Why data interoperability is crucial for patients and caregivers

Physicians recognize the importance of having the right information at the right time.

86%
think better data interoperability would significantly cut time to diagnosis.

95%
say increased data interoperability will improve patient outcomes.

96%
agree that easier access to critical data can save lives.

Healthcare professionals are already experiencing the benefits of better data.

95%
of those working at organizations with data interoperability measures believe it has helped them provide higher quality patient care.

Smarter healthcare data creates new possibilities.

Inefficient reporting wastes irreplaceable time.

4
hours per day
The average time physicians spend reviewing or updating healthcare records.

More personalized care is key.

90%
say data efficiencies would help them provide more personalized care.

Better data benefits patients.

92%
of physicians believe technology can improve patient experiences.

Interoperability is a clear priority.

98%
of physicians want data interoperability to be a priority at their healthcare organization right now.