

Build class templates in Google Classroom

Shareable class templates and classwork are coming soon to Google Classroom in beta. If you're preparing curriculum and lesson plans this summer, build class templates in Classroom to easily distribute to educators in your department or organization at the start of the school year.

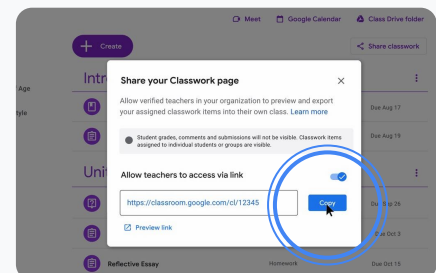

To express interest in the beta, sign up here: goo.gl/shareable-classwork-beta.

What's a class template?

- A class in Google Classroom that contains standardized or high-quality curricula for other educators to reference and use in their own classes
- No need to add co-teachers to class templates. Instead, you can share a link to the class template to relevant users.

Build class templates in Google Classroom

Support collaboration and professional development among educators by building class templates with standardized or high-quality curricula for educators in your department to use. No need to add co-teachers, with this new feature you'll be able to share a link to the class template.

Share and distribute templates to educators in your department

Once your class template is ready, you can get a unique link to it, then share the link via email, on a department website, or however you share resources with educators.

Educators can preview and import classwork to their own classes

When they open the link, educators can see the classwork page of your class template, select which materials or topics they would like to use from the template, then import them to an existing class or to a new class.
